Production and Non-Production License Terms

PRODUCTION LICENSE

A production environment is an installation that is available for final products to be created on the system. Production environments drive printers and/or are doing productive work in the creation and management of data for end user consumption. Licensed usage is limited to loading on a single server (or single virtual instance) and for the functionality allowed by the Program feature(s) acquired.

NON-PRODUCTION LICENSE

A non-production environment is an installation that (i) in the case of a Cold Backup License, is available when the purchased environment fails, such as a disaster recovery environment, and (ii) in the case of a Restricted Use License, is one available to support certain more active uses in support of a Production License. Licensed usage is limited to loading on single server (or single virtual instance) and for the functionality allowed by the Program feature(s) acquired. Ricoh provides, as further described below, one Cold Backup License per purchased license for no additional charge and offers the specified Restricted Use Licenses for purchase at additional charges.

Cold Backup License – No additional charge

· Cold Backup

In this environment, the Program is installed on a backup server but is not running jobs, and customers are NOT required to purchase additional restricted or production licenses. The number of Cold Backup licenses in use cannot exceed the number of purchased licenses.

Restricted Use Licenses – Additional charge

· Failover

In this environment, the Program is installed on at least two systems with shared storage and one instance of the Program acts as the primary instance. If the primary instance fails, the customer uses utilities provided with the Program to allow another instance to act as the primary instance. Customers are required to purchase a production license for the primary instance and a restricted use license for each additional instance that has the Program installed.

· Development/Test/Staging

In this environment, the Program is installed and running jobs but no final products are created on the system. It is used for developing, testing, and/or staging the solution. Customers are required to purchase a restricted use license and usage is limited to non-production work on a single server (or single virtual instance).

The above RESTRICTED USE LICENSE terms apply to the following features and their associated maintenance when they are purchased and installed with the Program.
